Explore communist perspectives through...

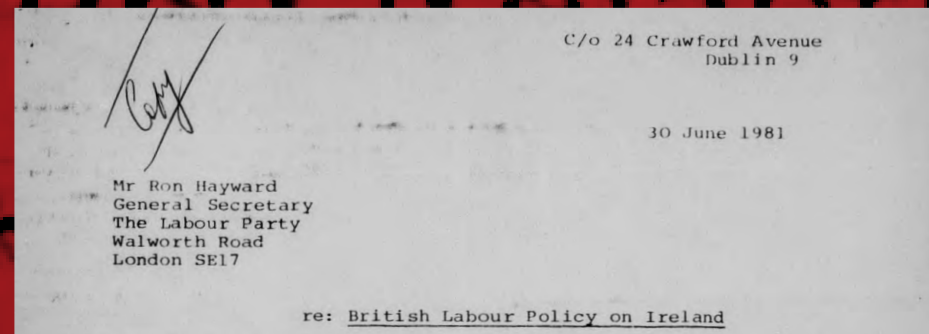

British Online Archives' updated collection, British Communism through Committee Work, 1926-1992, is drawn from various committee and departmental papers of the Communist Party of Great Britain (CPGB).

The CPGB spawned many specialised committee and departments during its lifetime, with their duty being to investigate specific subject areas and advise the ruling Executive Committee on prospective party policy and other relevant information.

This collection is part of the British Communism at Home and Abroad, 1883-1991 series.

...specialised departmental and committee work

The material-type featured varies from correspondence between key committee members, meeting minutes, reports, as well as pamphlets and other publications.

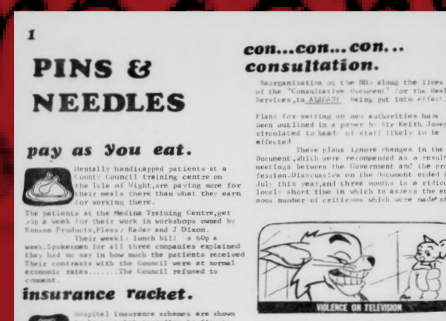

The collection contains over 5,000 unique images.

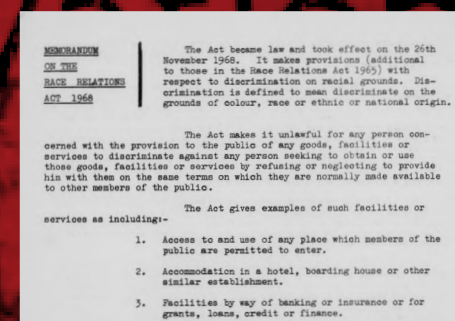

Papers from the Jewish Committee chart the rise of fascism in Europe and demonstrate the CPGB's central place to the resistance of fascism at home and abroad.

The West Indies Committee and Race Relations Committee offer a fascinating look at immigration and integration in the post-war years.

Other featured documents provide a unique insight into communist perspectives on healthcare provision, parliamentarianism, and communist society across the Iron Curtain.

Material from the Health Advisory Committee covers the establishment of the NHS and the pressure it came under during the years of Thatcherism.

The various subject matter of the collection reflects the ambitious politics of the Communist Party of Great Britain.
